BRIEF COURSE DESCRIPTION

The overall aim of the course is to address the deficits in understanding and applying the concept of sustainable human development to development challenges in the region by bringing together practitioners, mid- and high-level policy makers, academia, and civil society activists from countries in the region as well as experts on issues of Human Development and the Millennium Development Goals, both from UNDP, CEU and other European institutions

The course will consist of two modules – an on-line self-learning module in April and an in-residence course at CEU in July. The self-learning module is intended to familiarize participants with the major theoretical approaches in the area of sustainable human development. The in-residence module will build on the initial knowledge the participants are expected to have gained from Module 1, will extend it through additional lectures and will bridge it with practical dimensions using the experience of practitioners from the region. Part of the time of the in-residence course will also be devoted to developing individual projects related to the topics discussed. The selection of participants for the in-residence course will be made on the basis of the results of the test participants will pass after completing Module 1.

The Summer University was established in 1996 and is aiming to involve a high-level international faculty (including CEU faculty), and excellent advanced doctoral students, junior or post-doctoral researchers, teachers and professionals as participants. While application from all over the world is encouraged, continued priority is given to applicants from Central and Eastern Europe, the former Soviet Union and countries experiencing emerging democracies worldwide. Applicants from these countries, when admitted on merit, will be eligible for scholarship, while those from developed countries will usually be expected to pay fees.
