BRIEF COURSE DESCRIPTION

This Summer Institute sub-course is designed for people working on advocacy and policy related to children's right to education. The course will provide participants with opportunities to dissect, discuss, and debate inclusive education and discrimination in education with experts from the field.

At the completion of this course participants will be able to:

- Frame advocacy for inclusive education in terms of both human rights and education quality;
- Discuss the ways in which discrimination is constructed in different social and geographical contexts, including how existing categorization and data collection methods mitigate, monitor, and reinforce discrimination; and
- Advocate for inclusive education policies and practices in ways that unite, rather than further divide, other marginalized groups.
