BRIEF COURSE DESCRIPTION

In recent decades Internationalization-at-Home (IaH) has been viewed by many European universities as a solution for providing students the global competencies required from professionals working in an international and interconnected society. The goal of IaH is to transform classrooms and campuses into spaces that intentionally promote intercultural, international, and global learning.

Due to the topic's current importance there are numerous courses and workshops addressing the issue of IaH. Nevertheless, this summer course is one of the very few providing a comprehensive view on the multiple facets of IaH in an intensive format that brings together experienced moderators, instructors and participants, and allows for mutual learning.

The course will offer participants an occasion to discuss the challenges and opportunities brought about by the internationalization of universities. It would also present and discuss a wide range of case studies - including successful and less successful ones - and challenge course participants to re-examine the degree of internationalization in their own institution and national higher education system, as well as bring internationalization at home in line with their universities' mission.

The course is aimed primarily at representatives of higher education institutions interested to enhance their international character. It encourages peer learning and experience-sharing among participants. It intends to bring together:

- university leaders and managers involved or interested in increasing the internationalization of their policies and curricula
- faculty members designing or redesigning their courses for either an international cohort of students and/or developing courses of an international focus or character
- staff members working in international offices, quality assurance offices or on curriculum development
- students involved in university governance
- representatives of education think tanks

Central European University's summer school (CEU SUN), established in 1996, is a program in English for graduate students, junior or post-doctoral researchers, teachers and professionals. It offers high-level, research-oriented, interdisciplinary academic courses as well as workshops on policy issues for professional development, taught by internationally renowned scholars and policy experts (including CEU faculty). Application from all over the world is encouraged. Financial aid is available.
