The course is designed to be a forum for exchange and mutual learning for practitioners of constitutional reform and scholars of constitutional change. In previous years participants included members of constitutional review commissions, civil servants, judges, civil society activists, officers from the AU, UN-missions and other intergovernmental organizations as well as academics with an interest in law, government and politics. Our participants and alumni are members of an ever-growing network of professionals involved in constitution-building in and beyond Africa. Many are among the contributors of the recently published volume on "Public Participation in African Constitutionalism" (eds. T. Abbiate, M. Böckenförde, V. Federico, Routledge (2018)) and of the Voices from the Field section of International IDEA's blog on constitutional developments.

Applications are invited from professionals and academics working on constitutional building in Africa and with prior knowledge of the field (such as civil society activists, civil servants, consultants, and AU- and UN-officers, professors, researchers and graduate students).
